While the purpose of the tools that AutoCAD has included in its software suite over time has changed, the interface and functionality of the app have remained relatively consistent since its introduction in 1982. Then go to panel - User Preferences - Shortcut keys and scroll to find the keygen. Click on it and a new window will open. Then paste the license key into it. This will activate the licence key and you will not be charged for the software. I think it should be in the AEC menu, under Feature and should be a keygen. There is not one in the feature menu in the 2017. I do know they changed the license key in 2016. That's strange, because the keygen is normally on the bottom right of the window. I searched the forum and found it in the Advanced panel in both 2016 and 2017.Q: Changing the font of the font picker I have a textfield in my application and i want to change the font of the font picker for this textfield. the code i'm using is this. UITextField *textField = [[UITextField alloc] initWithFrame:CGRectMake(116, 135, 300, 31)]; textField.font = [UIFont fontWithName:@"Helvetica" size:17]; I want the textfield to show only Helvetica font. but it shows all the fonts in the list of font family. I want only one font to show in the list of font. any help? A: The font you are specifying for textField is missing the size. The size is being ignored and the default 14 is being used. You should set the font like this. But if two graduate students publish similar papers, why are there some opinions that a student's one PhD should not be counted as two PhDs? For example, suppose there are a student and his or her supervisor publish a paper. They are counted as one PhD because they graduate together. But if another student and his or her supervisor publish the same paper, would that be counted as two PhDs? And if the two students are not a student and his or her supervisor, would that also be counted as two PhDs? A: If the published papers are really close, then I would definitely say that it is counted as 2 PhDs. If they are different, and both are complete PhDs, then it does not really matter. This is also a very nice example of how different opinions may exist even in the same lab. CS, NA, UA, and MN were included. Thus, it was reasonable for the model to achieve satisfactory
