LISTEN TO ARTICLE 1:11 SHARE THIS ARTICLE Share Tweet Post Email Photographer: Yeo Jun-woo/Bloomberg Photographer: Yeo Jun-woo/Bloomberg Panasonic Corp. and Toshiba Corp. are planning to team up in a $21 billion liquefied-natural-gas project, which will be jointly owned and operated, a person with direct knowledge of the matter told Bloomberg. Toshiba's energy business will join the Japanese conglomerate's semiconductor division, the person said. The two companies will begin discussing the deal as soon as this week, the person said, asking not to be identified because the talks are private. The partnership will be a two-way deal, so Panasonic could invest in Toshiba's emerging business, the person said. The partnership would create a North American liquefied-natural-gas player that would be Japan's biggest independent gas producer. It would also give Toshiba access to the region's markets as one of the few companies with manufacturing operations in the area. Panasonic spokesman Takashi Kataoka told Bloomberg that the companies are in discussions but didn't comment further. The Japanese government hasn't approved the sale.
