A wildfire in the Los Padres National Forest near San Luis Obispo, California, has spread rapidly toward a popular wilderness lake that residents have called home for decades, forcing evacuation of residents and prompting the U.S. Forest Service to declare a state of emergency. U.S. Forest Service Chief Tom Tidwell said late Tuesday the fire had advanced into the remote lake and was burning within 1,000 feet of the shore, prompting the agency to declare the area a disaster zone. "Because of the dangers presented by the fire, we have evacuated the campground and adjacent parking area along the lake," Tidwell said in a statement. The fire erupted about 1 a.m. (1300 GMT) Tuesday and raced through dense vegetation toward the lake and about 50 buildings and structures, according to the U.S. Forest Service. The lake, called Isabella Lake, is popular among hikers and anglers. "We have no idea where it is going to stop. You can see right up into the fire," said Erica 77a5ca646e

Q: In C++, what's the difference between #ifdef and #if __name__ == "__main__"? I've tried to compile and run C++ codes with different compiler options. I observed that sometimes one can write #ifdef and other sometimes #if __name__ == "__main__" and they generate different errors and warnings. For example, #include #include using namespace std; int main() { cout
