To evaluate the effectiveness and toxicity of high-dose cytarabine in patients with acute myeloid leukemia undergoing hematopoietic stemcell transplantation. Multicenter phase II study conducted at 13 centers between May 2002 and December 2004. A total of 56 patients, with median age of 45 years (range, 16 to 62 years), were evaluated. The conditioning regimen consisted of 2 doses of cyclophosphamide (4 g/m(2)) followed by a single infusion of thiotepa (200 mg/m(2)) and total-body irradiation (3.8 Gy). The patients also received a single infusion of high-dose cytarabine (1 g/m(2)) at the start of neutrophil and platelet engraftment. The main outcome measures were the frequencies of 2-year progression-free and overall survival, and the relative risks of treatment-related mortality and infections. After a median follow-up of 20 months (range, 0.5 to 40.3 months), 24 patients (43%) were alive without disease progression; the median time to progression was 9.3 months. The 12-month overall survival rate was 53.6%. No fatal treatment-related complications were observed. Grade 3 to 4 treatment-related cytopenia was observed in 11 patients (20%) during the first month of the post-transplant period. High-dose cytarabine was shown to be a safe, welltolerated therapy for patients with acute myeloid leukemia undergoing allogeneic hematopoietic stem-cell transplantation.
