MIA1, a novel nuclear pore complex component, mediates retinoic acid induced apoptosis of neural progenitor cells. Previously we demonstrated that all-trans retinoic acid (RA) induces apoptosis of developing mouse cerebellar granule cell precursors (CGNs) via p53 pathway activation. In this study, using a proteomic analysis of the protein composition of nuclei derived from CGNs treated with RA, we identified MIA1, a novel nuclear pore complex (NPC) component, as a primary target of apoptosis-inducing activity. Our results showed that treatment with RA for 24 hours decreased nuclear levels of MIA1 by about 42.5% and induced p53-dependent apoptosis in CGNs. When ectopically expressed in neuroblastoma cells, MIA1 could be detected at the nuclear pore complex by immunofluorescence microscopy using antibody against MIA1. As a result of this translocation, overexpression of MIA1 enhanced p53-induced apoptosis. These results suggest that MIA1 at the NPC could be the primary target of RA-induced apoptosis of CGNs.Geography and origin The Tihua prefecture, where the ancient Zhou city of Luoyang lies, is covered by plain and lowland alluvial soil. Most arable land is said to be flat and flooded (with over 700,000 ha of inundation or marshland), with the Jing and Fen Rivers forming tributaries. The main airport in Tihua is a small military airfield at Sanguan. In contrast, the Mengla prefecture in Southwestern Yunnan is mountainous terrain. It is also famous for its guava and was once home to a Buddhist royal monastery. I don't think I've ever been the youngest in my class, and if I had been, I would have felt completely out of place. I still do, actually, but I don't mind. I find I attract friends of a similar age. Friends who are intelligent and easy-going, who understand when I want to talk about poetry and art, the meaning of life and of death, music, travel, and so on. Why they would agree to talk with me when they could have gone in another direction is beyond me. But I think I'm not the only one. I also don't fit into some of the other groups, such as my school's "elite".

I'm wondering if there is anything objectively bad about breaking up a project over multiple files? Example: Project.js Require.js + NoMocks + some other modules + DOM voodoo Or, if you're not a fan of RequireJS: project.js MooTools Animated JQuery Ember Dojo and more I know it's not a big change, but I just like having all the code, and I feel like it makes things more organized. Are there any advantages to putting stuff in a single file? A: For a web project, using multiple files is something you would do with Node, but not a web site. Writing node-modules requires everything to be in a single file, and there's no need for multiple files in a node module. A: Uhm, Yes: No indentation No line breaks More code in one place More code in one place = more errors Harder to read code Easy to make hard to read code Any kind of complexity that you want to just keep hidden. Just use a single file for a quick glance and go ahead and minimize it as much as possible if it is not working. But if you absolutely want code files to be grouped together, use something like

JSLint and make sure that your code is formatted and indented properly. A: Instead of a single file you can use a module pattern: var myLib = (function(){ var
