These rules are applied to every event where no direct sunnah is found. Then, if no direct evidence can be obtained the event has to be ascertained from the conditions which indicate these rules. To do this, the general rules have to be seen in their detail, and those rules applied to the situation at hand have to be checked against the positive conditions that indicated the general rule. By such procedure it can be proved to be the facts that a historical event happened in the past or it did not happen at all. For example, we know that the Muslim Ummah did not send an expedition to the South. For that to happen the conditions that indicated this general rule have to be found and the general rule has to be applied to the situation, which would have made a historical occurrence. 1 Usul ul-Fiqh book. In Islam, Islamic jurisprudence, as it is commonly called, or Fiqh, is the science that investigates the laws and regulations of God. It represents the religion in the most accurate form it can be and thus should not be rejected. References Sources Feisal Abdul Rauf - Ushul al-fiqh book. university that is beyond its time As the US prepares for a next generation of technology education for the next generation of students, we would encourage others to consider Harvard's lead in this field. It is a strange thing to spend so much time studying technology that it is beginning to feel like a science. Harvard's professors are mostly academics, while many of those conducting these investigations are outsiders to the university. So when it comes to solving problems, we learn of new technology through reports and news stories by those who are not Harvard professors themselves. The problem is that you cannot learn anything from a report on your iPad – you need to be able to discuss and critique it. The university’s unparalleled course work and teaching methods is continually being challenged by the rising importance of technology. It is a wonderful university that is beyond its time. It is the university of the 21st Century. We are aware that Harvard will be a more focused place after the financial crisis that has seen the university rein in many of its activities. This is not a bad thing. We hope the rest of the world will also study this Harvard of the future as we try to change to survive in the face of technology in our economy and daily life. But the Harvard of the future will not be the same university as it was in the 19th century – not just because of the impact of technology but because the world has 570a42141b
