[Urinary cystography (author's transl)]. The excretion of protoscolices in the urine is a symptom which is very frequent in urinary infections. In that way the examination of the urine with a means of diagnosing the existence of protoscolices is very often necessary, which is why we are in favor of the examination of the urine by suprapubic puncture. All of those, whose exposition to the parasite has not been possible with the usual antibiotics, can now get the help of this kind of examination which has a fairly good and fast available if it is made under the scope of a high protection. The mode of examination we have chosen is the use of the X-ray opaque plastic tube which is clearly visible in every case and not to last, insofar as they ought to be removed in 1 to 2 days.[Quality improvement of the surgical technique of minimally invasive robotic assisted prostatectomy]. To standardize the operative technique of robotic assisted minimally invasive radical prostatectomy (RARP) at our institution to ensure the best clinical outcomes. From April 2014 to March 2015, we performed 155 RARP at our institution according to three different techniques. Of these, 35 patients (22.7%) were treated by retropubic approach, 87 (56.9%) by laparoscopic technique and 23 (14.7%) by totally endoscopic approach. Preoperative data, surgical techniques and postoperative data were compared in the three groups. Between the three groups, baseline characteristics (age, body mass index, PSA, prostate volume and DRE) showed no significant differences. In the robotic assisted group (n = 35), the mean operative time, console time, average of lymph node dissection, estimated blood loss, transfusion requirement, positive margins and positive surgical margins were significantly lower than the laparoscopic assisted group (P 0.05). In the robot assisted group, there was no difference of postoperative complications including erectile function recovery and sexual function between the two different surgical techniques. In our experience, the totally endoscopic-assisted technique showed less invasive advantages compared with the laparoscopic and the open technique. And according to our opinion, the endoscopic technique of RARP can be standardised.Q: Is it possible to use XPages with Google AppEngine? I wish to use Google AppEngine to host some custom Java

A treatment option that may be able to fully restore the left-sided lung function of patients with idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis (IPF), a progressive and fatal disease, is currently under investigation at the University of Pittsburgh (UPCI). The treatment option is a new, powerful drug that has been developed by Dr. Gregory B. Shafer, an internationally recognized expert on IPF and the director of the newly-established West Oakland IPF Clinical Research Center (WOICRC). It targets a new molecular pathway that is believed to be critical to the initiation and perpetuation of IPF. Dr. Shafer has created a tiny, needle-sized version of this new drug called RSC, which is injected directly into the lining of the lung, where the IPF begins. The drug works to reverse the most devastating part of IPF, abnormal activation of the lung's fibroblasts. In many patients with IPF, fibroblasts become activated and overproduce the proteins that form scar tissue and the fibroblasts eventually die from the damage they do. The new drug allows for fibroblasts to continue to make normal proteins but prevents them from making the abnormal ones that form scar tissue. This should be an effective treatment for IPF. Dr. Shafer is funding the research of several of his former UPCI trainees. They are conducting studies at our WOICRC and at UPCI sites throughout the country that have been approved by the UPCI Clinical Trials Review Committee (CTRC). Participants in the studies are IPF patients, given an anti-fibroblast therapy that Dr. Shafer and his team developed, and who have shown no response to standard therapies. The patients will be treated with RSC at UPCI and at their local site and the results compared to those of a group of patients who receive a placebo. These unique and innovative studies have the potential to change the way IPF is treated, which could lead to a dramatically better quality of life for these patients. They have the potential to provide a better quality of life to these patients, by delaying the scarring of the lungs and allowing them to live longer. We are proud to be associated with a medical research facility that has the talent, expertise and resources to develop innovative and groundbreaking therapies. We encourage you to consider how you may be able to help Dr. Shafer by contributing to this effort. The funds generated by this program will help fund
