What's new:

Ventura County Fire and Rescue was founded in 1948, when the population of Ventura County, California was barely one million people. Mounted on Bear Mountain, the department provided fire protection for a 15-mile-wide area of southern Ventura County that included Piru, Santa Paula, Camarillo and Ojai. The service area was too large for a single firehouse, and out of necessity, the four fire departments in the area (one each from Camarillo, Ojai, Santa Paula, and Piru) would share a firehouse that is located in a bunker at the top of Bear Mountain at Beach and Victoria Avenues. The 42-year history of Fire and Rescue has provided Ventura County with a strong foundation of capability, nurturing a commitment to community safety and a high-quality fire service delivery that continues to grow. Mountains and Ocean Landscape In the 1950s, the City of Oxnard and the Oxnard Union School District built an enormous water tank at the top of the hillside overlooking the Oxnard - Long Beach coast. In order to reach this location, the Fire Department of Ventura County (Fire/Rescue) had to build a road to get to the top. Travel on the road is slow, extremely bumpy and wrought with problems. As Ocean Avenue winds its way to the top of the mountain, particularly at the dangerous city/highway intersection at Long Beach Boulevard, the road itself can be the cause of a fire. "If the road weren't there," said CalFire representative Tom Ducey "one morning over 50 years ago, we would have had a motor vehicle fire." "The only way down and up is by way of the tippy top of the mountain called the 'firehouse isle', which has slowly crumbled away. It was built as a barracks for the California National Guard. Across the street from the firehouse was a large private residence with a red light which turned on every hour. There were often startled citizens out in the middle of the night, approaching the firehouse as they were in their summer clothes. Firefighters would be inside getting a breather when the owner of the night watch bellowed, 'Get out of there, you people are scaring the living hell out of me.'" Fire/Rescue, in addition to its two (yes two) fire stations, the headquarters' Operations/Training Center and two stand-alone engine houses, the "A"
