A top-down shooter with survival horror elements. Your flashlight is your only view into the darkness all around you. Only the truly unluckiest among us survive. Are you that unlucky? GAMEPLAY: Each level is procedurally generated. In environments shaped by human heartlessness, monsters are the only thing that go bump in the night. Equip your flashlight with special abilities and use them to your advantage. Find your way to the exit. The world is your enemy - and in the dark, everyone's an enemy. Strife is everywhere. Wreak havoc. Each encounter is unique - think of the classic video games of the 80s. Pick your way forward and build up your weapon loadout as you go. Level-up and evolve your character. No two playthroughs will be the same - every level is procedurally generated. The environment is your arsenal. It's full of traps. Certain areas are harder than others. If you live to see tomorrow... FEATURES Heartless Dark is a top-down action-roguelike with survival horror elements. It plays like a familiar top-down-shooter but your flashlight is your only view into the darkness - oh and your 6th sense. Resources are scarce and even the furniture could be trying to kill you. Note from Roarke (the developer): Heartless Dark was designed as a 'coffee-break roguelike' - easy to pick up and put down and not hugely demanding of your time. A run could be completed in around 20 minutes if you're good enough. While it may not contain thousands of item combinations, hundreds of enemies and complex meta-progression like other games in the genre, I've still put my passion into creating a unique, atmospheric and replay-able experience. Action-Roguelike: Shoot, dodge, stun, electrocute, throw bombs and other tools as you kill monsters in abandoned corporate offices. Expect procedural levels, stats, upgrades, synergies, multiple characters and perma-death. Oppressive Darkness: Your flashlight is your only view into the darkness all around you. Oh and your 6th sense. Survival Horror: Your survival relies on spatial awareness, managing your limited resources and learning to use hazards to your advantage. FEATURES GAMEPLAY: Randomly generated corporate office levels Perma-death Environmental hazards Stats, upgrades

What's new in Tower!3D - YMML Airport:

ing at E3 Share. The graphical adventure has new races and puzzle themes, but still not quite ready for prime time. By IGN

Staff Game designer Jeff Rubenstein has come aboard as director on this throwback to the days when graphic adventures reigned supreme. If anything, "Bouncing Bear" is more of an action-adventure than a traditional system adventure. You're playing as a so-called Bigfoot, a weird-looking, hairy, carnivorous ape who can throw rocks with his huge hands and you take the role of visiting apes as they traverse through the mysterious Land of Z, rounding up refugee gorilla settlements to prevent them from being wiped out by territorial chimpanzee tribes. Rubenstein has been working on the game now for about four years and promises that after you play the demo there'll be no rubber-duck controversy. Also new is a new look for the third act of the game, a climax involving the battle between Bigfoot and an evil-looking lizard suit. Bigfoot has a long-range electronic eye attack and can also plunge into the ground at regular intervals to come up with a sonic attack to shake up the wild gorillas. Instead of wandering around finding items, you can now use your Bigfoot power to jump to the right item's location and knock it over. Items can also be hovered over to be inspected and broken open for the power they contain. This game was created by people who still enjoy graphic adventures, such as Victory Kid, and who love to play old-fashioned long games. We were skeptical at first, but we decided to play to find out if Rubenstein's new game could recapture the old magic. Should be fun. Our only complaint is that this looks like my computer at home has better graphical capabilities than my PlayStation at home. Look for "Bouncing Bear" sometime around the end of the year. Rubenstein: I guess it's time for me to reveal what I've been doing to my past self. I've been working on "Bouncing Bear," the sequel to 1994's "Rubenstein: Survivor," under a green light. We've got a different team of programmers and artists than the first game, and a brand-new engine that allows us to make the game bigger and better than we did before. We've also built a more advanced hit detection system that not only detects the hit but also determines a hit's position on the screen, so you don't have to look for it. By the time
