Because Windows 7 is bundled with Windows .Q: JavaFX: Storing User Input in a Variable Sorry if this seems really basic but I'm a beginner to programming. I've created a lab assignment that is very similar to a lab I had in a former semester, but I am having some issues with the way things are done. The point of the lab is to just input a number, convert it to the indicated number of pieces, and then place the pieces in a grid. If the number is less than that grid value (I can change it to be any value), I want it to take the number and add 3 and then place a 3 in the appropriate grid location for that number. What I'm having issues with is storing the number in a variable so that I can determine how many pieces to add to the number. I'm not sure if I should use an ArrayList or the String type of variable. This is the method I'm currently using:

public String findNumber() { String number = ""; Scanner scanner = new Scanner(System.in);

---

```
System.out.println("Enter a number you'd like to break into");
number = scanner.nextLine(); return number; } A: You can use StringBuilder
```
