The California Supreme Court case of "the Baby M" is used to argue for the abandonment of state adoption and paternity laws which permit adoption and paternity by persons who have not cared for the child for a significant period of time. This article evaluates whether the state can restrict the ability of biological fathers to parent through the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment. I argue that a state may condition a man's access to the chance to adopt or to establish paternity on a doctor-supervised agreement to defer genetic parenthood, so long as the state acts in good faith to protect the best interests of the child. This evaluation is supported by the state's duty to act in good faith to avoid discrimination and by the unique advantages of assisted reproduction. I conclude that the state may provide an opportunity for a woman to use assisted reproduction with the understanding that the state will provide for the child's best interests and that the man is not obliged to accept that opportunity.Q: Why do I have to split my SHA256+HMAC+SHA256 hex string into 3 different strings for using openssl_encrypt?
