

FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” which uses real-life movement data to emulate the unique on-field athleticism of players. FIFA 22 also features the “RealTouch ID” technology, a new in-game sensor which allows players to detect off-ball movement and impacts on the ball with a fraction of a second. Additionally, “RealPlayer ID” technology allows for significant improvements in player personality and personalisation. “Since the advent of FIFA 17, our team and players have been pushing our limits to give the fans the best game possible in every title we’ve released, and we’re looking forward to the coming year with great anticipation as we enter another new decade with a new generation of gameplay,” said Tim Parnell, Vice President and Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. “Our Academy teams continually innovate and challenge ourselves while continually delivering the most authentic gameplay experience on the PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and PC, and what we’ve learned with FIFA 18 now informs our next generation of football.” “It’s time for the next generation of football,” said FIFA VP of Product Development Matt Bilbey. “The movement technology introduced in FIFA 17 helped redefine football on the PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC – but in FIFA 22, we’re once again pushing the envelope. Our vision is to deliver an action football experience that is unmatched anywhere else.” Gameplay Features: “RealPlayer ID” technology introduces “play style customization” that changes how you interact with the match environment. You can now choose to play as a focused, striker-centered game or a support-minded, box-to-box, defensive-minded game. Your play style will reflect your chosen play-style. “RealTouch ID” technology allows for new ways of interacting with the game: off-ball movement detection. By playing with perfect timing and an instinctive awareness of your surroundings, you can dictate the pace and tempo of the match with your preferred play style. “Fluid Motion” now more accurately represents the individualism of player movement. This year, as FIFA moves onto the next-generation, we are proud to introduce the new “Move” command that gives you more precise control of the player’s movement, as they perform actions
