The enhanced player animations are said to recreate player appearances as seen in real life, with more immersive movement and on-pitch physics. At launch, players will be able to customize their first-person view after matches, allowing them to watch replays in slow motion, view highlights in 4K or share replays with friends on social media. "We are humbled to deliver FIFA 22, the most immersive experience ever and further define the FIFA franchise," Head of FIFA Content Peter Ewald said. "With our newly-developed technology, 'HyperMotion Technology,' we are putting players at the heart of the experience. "The core fundamentals of player interactions, tackling and ball handling have been improved and enhanced throughout. This is not only an advantage for player aesthetics but also for game play, which has resulted in more realistic, higher quality collisions, adjustments to tackle speed and recovery. We wanted to ensure that every action played out with feeling." Here's more from the FIFA announcement: The new 'HyperMotion Technology', developed in conjunction with our partners at EA SPORTS, is based on a series of player movement and interaction patterns for each of the 5,400 licensed players and 700,000 official actions in the new game. This data was then developed, alongside our programming team, to create 'real life' movement and collisions for 22 different players. Each of these players will have differing movement patterns when carrying, heading, receiving, recovering and shooting the ball. Players will also have unique and distinct on-the-ball interactions. For example, those in the attacking third will exhibit different movement and interaction patterns than players in the back lines. This means their game play should also be varied in order to increase the depth and visual appeal of the game. Take a look at a few of the ways we've taken elements of real-life game play and amplified them on to the pitch... First Touch: Hand to Hand All-new Engine: Powered by our new 'Real Player Interactions' engine, as well as the 'Mobility' engine, playing styles such as 'pass and move' work seamlessly. Individually, real-life player skills can be hard to replicate in game. However, due to the level of detail we were able to add to these elements, we were able to create completely new ways for players to perform these actions and create entirely new forms of gameplay
