In vitro effects of amifostine, a cytoprotector, on T lymphocytes. In vitro effects of amifostine, a new cytoprotector, on T cell proliferation and cytokine production were assessed using purified peripheral blood T cells from five normal individuals and 10 cancer patients. The effect of amifostine on T cell proliferation was determined by ³H-thymidine incorporation. The effect of amifostine on T cell activation was evaluated using the presence of supernatant interleukin 2 (IL-2) production in 72-hr cocultivation systems. IL-4, IL-4 receptor (IL-4R) chain and IL-10 were detected by ELISA. Amifostine caused a dose-dependent inhibition of T cell proliferation. At concentrations of 100 and 300 microg/mL, amifostine significantly suppressed IL-2 production and IL-4R expression, whereas the production of IL-10 was increased by amifostine at the concentration of 300 microg/mL. In conclusion, amifostine can strongly inhibit T cell proliferation and IL-2 production, which may result in a blockade of the IL-2 dependent step of T cell proliferation, and also induce IL-4R expression and IL-10 production, which may lead to a suppression of IL-2 mediated T helper cells function.
