I'm pretty sure I heard them at Malcom, with the Wasters, but they weren't there, they were at.45 in the conservatory. Discogs had a few, but they still no the other. I was surprised to find that none are being sold right now either. Thanks for the info. I just checked out the web page now, and am down to one confirmed -Some-record-set-taste-in-buses/ which is still a pretty good pic. I'm going to run back and see if I can find the others again, and perhaps post some more info. I'm basically done for now. Re: Crack Malcom High Rollers & Wastes Hi. I'm trying to locate some of these: IMG_0256.jpg, IMG_0227.jpg They're in the second disc by the piece called "The Malcolm High Roller" by May. Can you say what this is? If it is not a Blackstar A-99, then I know that I have a ton of those in my collection. They are all unnumbered. OK, I've completely run out of time and just went to check the record labels on the back. The title of the piece is "Track: The Malcolm High Roller". The record label is "Blackstar". I am **very** intrigued by this disc!!! (I've also discovered that one can buy an investigation of an epidemiological method for the detection of legionellosis in patients in a hospital environment. A new serological method for the detection of past infection with legionella pneumophila serogroup 1 was tested on 1042 patients (young adult men and women), who at the time of the test had been admitted to hospital for various illnesses, under the supervision of the Infectious Diseases Department at the University of Birmingham Hospital. The sera were tested in parallel with the fluorescent antibody staining test and the slide agglutination test.

Fifty-four sera showed a fourfold rise in titre in the new method, compared with the reference tests. The majority of these sera were positive on both tests

Background The ability to synthesize human speech is often used to facilitate communication between individuals and the training of human speakers. Human speech is typically generated by speakers producing sound using the larynx. Exemplary acoustic features of human speech include the spectral shape, spectral envelope, energy distribution, and duration of a speech sound. Additionally, the acoustics of a particular speaker's voice will also be produced as a unique acoustic signature. The acoustic signature may be analogous to a fingerprint identifying a particular speaker.

Techniques have been developed to generate "synthetic" speech sounds or synthesized speech for a wide variety of applications. Conventional synthesized speech techniques typically model the larynx as a linear system coupled to a noise source. As a result, the acoustic qualities of the generated speech are determined by the modeled vocal tract, which fails to accurately reflect the highly non-linear throat that produces human speech. For example, a conventional speech synthesis technique fails to simulate non-linear effects such as velopharyngeal closure, tongue geometry, and the larynx position in the neck. The lack of accuracy in the production of synthesized speech may result in synthesized speech having less realistic or “creaky” qualities. Unwanted variations in a synthesized speech signal produced by conventional
