Field of the Invention The present invention relates to computer systems. More specifically, the present invention relates to a method and an apparatus for power saving in a computer system using a shared memory. 2.

Related Art A computer system typically includes a host processor and a memory (as indicated in FIG. 1). In operation, the host processor 10 is used to perform various computer functions including the processing of instructions and data associated with software applications or operating systems. Typically, the host processor 10 is accessed by an input/output (I/O) controller 20. The memory 22 is utilized by the I/O controller 20, in conjunction with the host processor 10, in order to store data associated with the software applications and operating systems that are being executed on the host processor 10. A host processor, an I/O controller, and a memory (e.g., a main memory) typically need to be accessed by the same clock (CLK). For example, a host processor needs to obtain instructions and data on each clock pulse that the host processor is operating, and the host processor, memory and I/O controller need to be accessed on each clock pulse. However, since all of these components are typically operating on the same clock, any performance optimizations which are performed by these components require that the changes to the system operation are made on the same clock as well. Otherwise, the performance optimizations may affect the execution of the instructions and data being handled by the other components (i.e., the data and instructions being handled by the host processor 0cc13bf012

Load more.Washington Nationals pitcher Sean Doolittle was interviewed by Fox Sports' Bob Holtz and Joel Reuter on Wednesday, and was asked about his experiences in Washington so far. He said that he got a couple tweets calling him a Giant, and when he is on the mound he doesn't really care who is out there as long as it's not the opposition. "You're on TV. You're big," he said. "I just went one week without looking at Twitter, I swear, and I was like 'f**k.' You can't keep your head on a swivel. But it's great." He talked about how much the fans meant to him, and said he enjoyed shaking hands after his final start, even though it didn't feel great. He said that his kids will be able to enjoy playing ball in DC. "We saw them twice. I want to see the whole team before the season is over," he said. The fans have been great, but he also said that it's a more business-like atmosphere, so there are no real superstars or heroes in DC. He said that he's not a fan of celebrating his teammates, but he does enjoy celebrating the fans and that's what he'll do. When he was asked what he would say to the fans if he were traded to the Giants or the Dodgers, he joked that he would say "I promise not to be a Giant," and he said he would love to come back to his native San Francisco. He also said that he was "thrilled" to have not pitched in
