The vote was originally scheduled for December, but after last week's Special City Council Meeting, the city's Finance Committee decided to postpone the vote. To some residents the decision was welcome relief. "You can't make a difference if you're on the fence," said resident Elaine McLean. "We're very hopeful that by deferring the decision, it will allow the new council in January to continue the process," said Michele Zanini of the East Stockton Area Development Corporation. Zanini said the development plans are on hold until City Council takes action on several key redevelopment projects. Among the projects on the docket are the Bluffs at Stateline and The Bend at Interstate 5. The total cost is estimated to be upwards of $9 million. Meanwhile, the city's big development project with the East Stockton Area Development Corporation is on hold. Last week's vote had been to unanimously approve the East Stockton Area Development Corporation's (ESADC) R-1 downtown zoning designation. But the Planning Commission and Planning, Zoning and Building Department recommended against the zoning, saying the area is already built up. According to the city council's Finance Committee, the delay will give the City Council time to hear from various stakeholders before an October 2020 election. "The new council certainly, has got to have a strong voice, a much stronger voice that we heard before, so I think what this hopefully will do is give the new council the opportunity to listen to the concerns that were heard before," said McLean.
