(AP) — A bill that would authorize New York state to create a utility to take over the debt-ridden Central Hudson Gas & Electric Co. drew criticism this week from nearly every corner of the political spectrum. It also drew attention from the state's No. 2 Senate leader, who said the legislation should be reworked by the Legislature. A bill in the State Senate that would authorize the state to create a public utility to take over Central Hudson's debt racked up by the 2010 explosion of a natural gas pipeline and a 2010 flood would have been the latest in a series of partial state takeovers of
