Windows 10 Pro 64bit.Q: Deferred execution with ES6 generators Suppose I have the following generator: function* foo() { console.log('here'); yield 3; console.log('there'); } function* bar() { console.log('bar'); for (const x of foo()) {

`console.log(x); } console.log('done'); }` `bar();` It logs "here" 3 "there" undefined bar done whereas what I really want is "here" "there" 3 "bar" undefined "done" Is there a simple way to achieve this? A: ES6 introduces the concept of generators to the JavaScript world. The essence of an ES6 generator is that it is an iterable object (otherwise it would be called an iterator). It is also a generator itself, meaning that it produces the output sequentially, one value at a time and either throws or returns an exception. A generator function can only be used as a generator and
