is a real-time strategy game played through cinematic scenes of an intense nightmarish nightmare. During the evening of the winter storm when the snow is beginning to fall, a white-haired man and his wife is abducted by a group of hooded men. Raging snow and a moonless sky have a somber atmosphere. As the protagonist, the Hunter, bravely risks his life in order to save his wife and child. He will go through raging fire in order to reach them. The player will have to build his own battleline. Overcome the enemies and save the family. Patience and Planning - Black Witchcraft is a real-time strategy, a genre that requires more planning than intuition. The player must build a battleline and then launch attacks in order to defeat the enemies. Planning is essential to victory. The player must consider the weather, positions of the warriors, and time. Enemy attacks may require a different strategy than regular attack. Realistic Soundtrack - Realistic situations and gameplay combined with a cinematic soundtrack, was not an easy task. This project required a special sound design and original music. All the sounds and music was recorded in analogue audio gear, producing a warm and rich sound. Stunning graphics - HD graphics at the max resolution of 1920x1200. Non-dimensionalized model {#sec-nondimensional} The theory developed in the preceding sections was applied and results were presented for a representative modeling case: a periodically perforated lane (hanging barrier) flanked by opening (exit) lanes. Thus, the whole enclosure can be mapped to a square, with the opening lanes represented by the diagonal corners and the hanging barrier by the horizontal ones. In that case, $\eta = \infty$ implies open boundaries, and $\eta = 0$ implies closed ones. The perforation of the lane is characterized by the size parameter a , which is the half width of the sinusoidal curve (its “wavelength”). The final spatial resolution (both in terms of the number of non-dimensional grid points and the number of involved microscale states) turns out to be especially relevant for the determination of the optimal value of a . For example, when $a = 0.6$, $n_x = 36$ and $n_y = 18$ are needed. In Figure \[fig-non-dimens-lve\], $\rho_{\mathbf{0}}$ is plotted for increasing values of a , showing a dependence with η . It is worth noting that $a = 0.6$ is also the wavelength of the perforated lane, which is the only relevant physical lengthscale for the system (one can even see how, in the presence of periodic perforations, the flow tends to interfere with the periodic pattern on the bottom). Therefore, for a given η , a high resolution yields a faithful representation of the real flow as it is expected from the CFD simulation (Figure \[fig-non-dimens-sso\]). To retain a satisfactory accuracy, it is necessary to couple high-resolution prediction (small cells) with a fine-scaled resolution. From the figure, we also see that convergence as obtained with the present FD method on coarse grids. Convergence is obtained at the minimum grid size, which turns out to be $n_y = 3$ and $n_x = 12$. Higher values are avoided since then, η becomes large. Note that higher resolution also implies lower time step Δt . In addition, this figure shows the $\rho_{\mathbf{0}}$ pattern obtained from CFD (Figure \[fig-non-d
