Here are some tips for digital photography and the use of Photoshop for beginners: 1. Select the correct file format Before you start Photoshop, create a new file. If you open an existing file, it will overwrite the previous image with the new one. This can cause problems because digital cameras store their images in different formats, such as JPEG, TIFF, and RAW. 2. Restrict file size Your computer's hard drive space is limited, so be careful about how much you store. You may only have 512 megabytes of space to play with, which can be a limiting factor as you create and edit your images. When you are saving images, it is best to compress them to save disk space. Photoshop has five image formats: JPEG, TIFF, GIF, and BMP. The others are used by software programs to create computer screensavers. You can save an image as a more compressed version of the original file and then later save it as a more general format when you are done. For example, you could save the image as a JPEG and then, when you are done, save it as a TIFF. More on file formats and compression 3. Create an image based on your camera settings Many digital camera systems offer different modes that cause your camera to behave in different ways when you are taking images. For example, you may be offered settings that apply different exposure and color sensitivities. When you think about these settings, it helps to understand what they mean. At the bottom of the camera menu, you may see a gray area labeled "exposure mode." Depending on the mode that you choose in this area, you will see different options. When you take a picture, the camera will adjust the settings that are active based on the settings in the exposure mode setting. You should take care in choosing the appropriate settings. If you make a mistake, you may have to start over. Be sure to experiment with the various settings to see what they do to your images. 4. Choose the most optimal color settings When you take a picture with your camera, the built-in sensors may record colors in different ways. This can cause some interesting issues with your images, especially if you wish to print your photos. If you are using the default white balance setting that the camera manufacturer provides, you can leave the color setting in the camera. Otherwise, you can change the color setting in your camera. Q: Cleaning up a flatulent dog's mess I have a 3 year old keeshond who is pretty enthusiastic about getting to the dishes. He uses his teeth to make his own toys and ends up destroying everything before going to the dishes for his litter box. In the past I've tried everything from harnessing him to the dish and taking it out to smacking him with a spatula to walking away and ignoring it until he loses interest and goes to the bowl. While these things can work I just feel like there's something more I can be doing. He really doesn't have any type of problem going to the bathroom and he isn't overly interested in food, just toys and food. I would think him wanting to go to the bathroom and then going to the dishes would be very similar so what are some other things I can do to make sure he is actually going and not just going to the bowl and then coming out? A: You are right about using the dogs understanding of the purpose of going to the "toilet" and the interest in food. However, most of the time, if the dog is going to the toilet, then he will find a way to go to the toilet, and if he is not going for food, then he is going for food. His problem is not going to the toilet enough. You need to train him to go to the toilet, and you need to provide him with a fun incentive to go to the toilet. Your best bet is to reward him for going to the toilet, since that will motivate him to go to the toilet more often. For example, when he urinates in a place where he doesn't have his dog kennel, instead of just telling him to go to the dog kennel, make sure to praise him for doing the right thing. If you use a lot of products, like puppy pads that has a sweet smell, it will be easier to get him to go to the toilet (since he will be more tempted to use the product). Lethal versus nonlethal genes: from embryogenesis to pattern formation. Inexpensive, high-throughput screening systems are needed for elucidating the biological functions of individual genes and gene products and for uncovering new genes and pathogenic pathways. This article presents a simple model for the genetic screens that can be used for screening the lethal effects of mutations in D

A United Airlines passenger who complained about two Caribbean men with a smelly snack have discovered he had nearly four pounds of cannabis in his carry-on suitcase and U.S. authorities are now investigating after the illicit cargo was found. The passenger, speaking to BBC News on condition of anonymity, said he was flying back from St Lucia on December 4 when he realised he had forgotten to pack a prescription inhaler for his asthma medication. His carry-on luggage was packed so tightly he suspected the inhaling device was not going to fit. So, looking for somewhere to unload his bags, he called a friend, who then gave him a "number" (a free phone number), he said. "This is what I did, I called him and said, 'Hey, I have some weed in my bag' and he said, 'Go ahead and drop it off at our house'," the passenger said. "I was like, 'Oh, OK. Are you sure you want me to drop it off in the carport?' But, he said, 'Yeah, you can stop the car, leave it in the carport and we'll go get it.'" Following the phone call, the passenger said he drove the one-hour trip to his friend's house and left his bags at the front door. "I had known him since I was 17 or 18 so I had no fear," he said. Asked if he knew his friend was a drug dealer, he said he "probably did at that point". He said he had been previously in contact with the man, but didn't know why his friend wanted the cannabis. "I thought he was a runner," he said. "Once you get weed in your carport, it's either there or it's not, he's not going to check it." United Airlines passenger Jason Wood responded to an ad placed by the passenger via Facebook. (Supplied: Jason Wood) The passenger, Jason Wood, said his friend would take the marijuana out to the yard and smoke it in his car. After stopping at the driveway, the man went inside his house and quickly returned, he said. "He came out, he said, 'Oops, my fault, that's from some guy'. He was like, 'I'll throw it away, don't worry about it'." Passengers'scared' of drug arrests
