I just want to know which of these is appropriate for the usage. I would like to meet Theo. I would like to meet Theodor. A: Theodorus is the formal name and fits the first example. With Theodorus you are conferring a title of honour - Theodor may or may not be a known name. Theodor shows an affectionate relationship to Theodorus. Theodor is a diminutive of Theodor and shows affectionate relationship to Theodorus. Theodorus is more formal than Theodor. The title Theodorus, or Theodor, carries the full weight of the first person singular of the name. A: I would suggest Théodore. It is of French origin so it may sound more natural for some. I would follow these trends: Theodorus sounds more commonly used for a man's name, while Theo is a more general term that may be used for both men and women. It has been a Greek name for many centuries, and this is what makes it sound so authentic. A: You can write the second or third example, but not the first. The name Theo is a diminutive of Theo (also the name of a dog, by the way) which was the name of a king of Sparta in the 8th century B.C. so you would not be calling him Theodorus but just Theo (the diminutive form).
