love! Suzanne the plus size blogger extraordinaire I'm a stay at home mom to two kids, a partner, and a very large sized dog. I'm a make up addict, journal addict, clothes addict, and cake addict. I blog because I enjoy it, not only does it help me track my life everyday, it shows my kids that they make a difference in the world, because being me is a part of the world. You are welcome to join me, in my world of joys and woes! trying to have a baby 6/06/2016 passed. My very best friends is expecting their first baby in 7 weeks. I am so excited for them and their partners. She had an implantation bleeding but was already past the stage of needing to take medication, so clearly mother nature took over. I knew I would pop for a day or two, but I really had no idea there was anything going on. My body immediately passed on trying to have a baby. I have been really, really sad. I think he passed because he is perfect little baby but the thought of my friend going through what she is going through has just kicked my body a bit. I cried yesterday and it was just out of sadness. It wasn't anger or envy or anything that made me feel like anything wasn't right. But, he is gone and nothing is going to bring him back. I need to be happy for him and the love he has, and be happy for her and the love she has and for her and her child. It is a difficult position to be in and I know she has some days where she will think I am so selfish and I understand that completely. I'm not going to go there. I think that I am going to bring my own baby to a event this summer. I want her to feel what I feel and I think that if I do that for myself it will

Love on Paper is a British television sitcom that aired on BBC Two in 1997. Written by Stephen Tompkinson and Steven Moffatt, the series revolved around the personal and professional lives of stylist Katie Verner (Olivia Newton-John), her best friend, Saffron, and her constantly breaking heart, Doris, who was played by Tamsin Greig. The characters were initially present in a 1990s New York City bachelor pad—with the room becoming a 30th-century galactic command centre as time passed. The series was created by co-creators Moffatt and Tompkinson and was directed by Peter Baynham and adapted by David Wooderson. Steven Moffat and David Howe were the story consultants, interviewed by the writers at one stage, and the production designer Johnny Byrne also assisted with some of the set designs. The single series was shown once in the middle of 1997. In a further effort to secure the interest of younger viewers, some repeats of the series began in 1999. A season 2 was in the pipeline at the time of Newton-John's death and finished in 2003 but was never shown. In 2006, Moffatt, Greig, and a third of the original cast appeared in an unofficial spin-off programme Sweet as Honey with Tamsin Greig on BBC3 in the United Kingdom and NBC in the US. Due to low viewing figures of the series, although it was shown in the United States, it was quickly removed from the BBC's viewing schedule and is today virtually unknown. Synopsis Katie (Olivia Newton-John) is a fashion expert who is continually making man-hunting mistakes in her quest for love. Her relationships never seem to last long and she seems to be stuck in a holding pattern, never getting closer to someone she genuinely likes. One of her greatest friends is Saffron (Tamsin Greig), who has a bad heart. Convinced that she won't beat the odds, she and Katie share both their obsessive love of football and desire for a perfect man. Also in the band are newest addition Doris (also played by Tamsin Greig); and Walker, the flamboyant lead singer. The central story is that Katie and Doris are in a long term relationship. One day, however, Doris has an affair with the accident prone entrepreneur, Dimitri. She later returns to Katie, wanting marriage and a family. Katie refuses
