The deal is expected to enhance the amount of home loans on the books of MGC and assure taxpayers that their money is protecting private investors. MGC's ownership is split between the Australian government and shareholders. The agreement between the two parties is a deal between Australia's finance and trade ministers, Robert McClelland and Simon Crean, to increase the share of government-owned stock in the corporation. "This is a win-win for the Australian taxpayer," McClelland told Fairfax Media. Fairfax Media understands that the deal, which is in advanced negotiations, will be signed on Monday. First Australia's housing finance arm, FA, owns 78 per cent of MGC and is the biggest owner of the corporation. New Zealand's largest private housing developer, Genesis, owns 9.1 per cent of MGC and 15.3 per cent of FA. In July MGC went into administration with the loss of $2.2 billion in mortgages. Its portfolio has been taken over by the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA). The long-term outlook for housing finance has been one of the biggest uncertainties for Australia since 2008, given the financial crisis. After the economic downturn, the Federal Government heavily lobbied the banks to provide more mortgage finance and it allowed the housing finance companies to be set up. There was some uncertainty as to how APRA would run the guaranteed mortgage organisations, given the scale of these new financial institutions and new risks. McClelland, who has been critical of his predecessor Tony Abbott's handling of the housing market, said the deal for MGC was done on a "really good basis" with "compromises on both sides". "Our government was of the view that the shareholders should have a greater role," he said 648931e174

One hundred nine patients with Cushing's disease (mean age 35 years) underwent transsphenoidal exploration at the Clinical Research Division between 1980 and 1989. All patients were carefully managed preoperatively with bromocriptine. Seventy-three percent of cases were cured or became partially controlled. Thirtyeight percent of patients required an adjunctive antiglucocorticoid treatment after 6 months. There were five deaths in the early postoperative period, and five patients experienced severe short-term and permanent complications. All cavernous sinus invasions occurred in the inactive group, so that the inactivation of the venous drainage was not necessary as a causal factor of the invasions. The only significant long-term complication was pituitary necrosis. Bromocriptine is a potent and safe drug in the treatment of Cushing's disease. Its close intraoperative and postoperative control, however, is mandatory to avoid some complications.Cortical areas activated during social behavior in the macaque monkey. Many theories of the neural
