Down to earth: Miller's Anesthesia. A: For some reason, you only want the links for a page without the rest of the document, the page with the reference to the book's description page. Try this code: Document doc = Jsoup.connect("").get(); Elements texts = doc.select("td[data-id=D060]/div/h2/a/@href"); for (Element e : texts) { System.out.println(e.text()); } But for a better approach, just submit your question for reviews to the process. Categorization of medical students: findings from a large school of medicine in the United States. Medical students have been the subject of much interest, but few studies have studied the processes involved in medical students' categorization of learners and individual clinicians. Students, staff, and faculty from a large school of medicine in the United States were asked to categorize 12 clinicians according to 3 criteria: perception of their abilities to do family medicine, perception of their ability to write abstracts, and perceived likelihood of doing family medicine after graduating from medical school. The authors used cluster and logistic regression analyses to examine the relationship between participants' perception of the clinician's abilities to do family medicine and their perception of the clinician's likelihood of doing family medicine. In addition, each participant's score on a criterion-referencing multiple-choice test (CAT) was linked to his or her categorization of 12 clinicians. A 5-cluster solution was chosen for the item-based analysis and logistic regression. A 4-cluster solution was chosen for the CAT-based analysis. A small percentage of individuals clustered by categorization with their teacher ($n = 2$), a family physician ($n = 3$), or with those clinicians in the same specialty ($n = 4$). The CAT score was weakly correlated with "ability to write abstracts" ($r(3) = .11$) but strongly correlated with "perception of likelihood of doing family medicine"
