remove AutoSave Account Info in Photoshop. I know this is a stupidly specific question, but I'm not sure where else to ask it. I have a model where I have a layer that is transparent (colour = 0, alpha = 100), and I have a semi-transparent white circle at that (colour = 255, alpha = 128). This white circle is the focus of my composition (it's in the middle), and the model around it is "background". When I render the image, the part of the circle around the focus is lighted. It looks like it is the focus, but the model around the focus is just as dark. How can I make the model around the focus appear as bright as the focus? It doesn't seem like it is my use of a grayscale map; I've tested using a white circle of the same radius as the black circle, and still it renders white. My impression
