What's new:

12:11 am Wed January 8, 2013 Selena Gomez's Wolf Pack Is Like a Family Selena Gomez led a band of friends at a Metro PCS store in Culver City last month. Taken more than a decade ago, the image showcases her stylish personality with her hair pulled back. Peter Yang for NPR NPR Producer Campbell Garfeild wasn't even walking down the street near West Hollywood's Walk of Fame on March 26, 2007, when he saw a photo in The Hollywood Reporter that made his day. The caption read, "Singer Selena Gomez is leaving U.S. recording label Geffen Records to pursue a career in acting." At about the same time, Garfeild was hunting for a place to live after splitting from a girlfriend. It was time for Garfeild to start over. So he set up a Twitter account and sent out 10 Tweets. While trying to find his own groove, he says, he replied to someone with the first Tweet: "Do you know of any good apartments in the area?" Maybe the person was savvy enough to realize the young man trying to find his way in the world might have something in common with their situation. So they wrote back: "Yeah, check out the area. Rent at LA's Westside is ridiculously high." Wait! That's me. I own that Tweet. I know, because my then-boyfriend saw it and now we get along famously. [Laughs] But even as his solution to the housing crisis in Los Angeles came true, Garfeild wasn't paying any attention to the gossip coming out of Hollywood: "They're talking about Selena Gomez leaving Geffen Records to pursue her dream of being an actress. What!? Selena who?" Meanwhile, he was still trying to find a place to live. Garfeild is now known as an active Twitter user. Of the 10 Tweet replies he sent, the most-followed was his request for finding apartments. He says, "In the six years I've been at NPR and I still haven't uploaded one proper Tweet or anything. A lot of it is just me trying to figure this whole thing out." Years later, it's difficult to imagine the last four years of Garfeild's life without the stress of finding a place to live: "The real estate market is such a mess in Los Angeles." But for some young people, finding "that person who you can

This one of the strangest, but well designed new racing game I've seen in a long time. You're given a set of options, and then can't go back. You have to see what happens. It's really impressive, and a great challenge. Crashout is kind of like Space Crashout is a brand new indie racing game that I just couldn't stop playing. It's got some really nice levels, and an interesting track design. For a limited
