An electronic instrument such as a printer, a duplicator, a facsimile apparatus or the like using an electrode array (array of electrodes) has a possibility of causing short-circuiting of the electrodes of a printed circuit board (hereinafter, referred to as xe2x80x9cprinted circuit boardxe2x80x9d) in a manner such that short-circuiting between the electrodes is avoided. Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. HEI9(1997)-347182 proposes a method in which electrode terminals projecting in the longitudinal direction of the electrode terminals are disposed on the printed circuit board, and simultaneously with the soldering of the electrode terminals are bent in the widthwise direction of the electrodes of the electrode array. With the conventional method, however, since the electrode terminals projected in the longitudinal direction of the electronic instrument are bent as described above, the degree of freedom for the errangement of the electrodes in the longitudinal direction of the electronic instrument is limited depending on the arrangement of the electrode terminals. In addition, since terminals are simply bent in the widthwise direction of the printed circuit board.
