Project Summary/Abstract

The focus of the proposed study is to develop an enhanced intervention for methamphetamine (MA) users engaged in high-risk sexual behavior (HRSB) who are at the greatest risk for HIV/STD/bloodborne viral infection transmission. We propose to develop an enhanced contingency management intervention designed to reduce both MA and HRSB, and increase a range of HIV/STI- related protective behaviors. In this formative study, we will pilot-test the enhanced CM protocol and refine it based on participant responses in the pilot phase. If the results are positive, we will proceed with a full-scale study to test the efficacy of this new and innovative intervention. MA is a highly addictive drug associated with high HIV infection, yet some MA users engage in HRSB, which often leads to illegal drug use and engages in risky sexual behaviors. Such risky sexual behaviors increase the risk of sexual HIV/STD/bloodborne viral infection transmission. Some interventions have been conducted to reduce both MA use and sexual risk behavior among MA users, including contingency management, motivational interviewing, and cognitive-behavioral therapy. Although these interventions have been successful in reducing MA use and sexual risk behavior, their effectiveness in reducing condom use has been much weaker. Previous research has shown that the most effective interventions to reduce risky sexual behavior include cognitive-behavioral strategies to change attitudes, beliefs, and self-efficacy and behavioral strategies that promote participants' self-efficacy, reduce pressure to engage in risky behaviors, and increase condom use. Contingency management has been used to decrease risky sexual behavior in other substance-abusing populations. This intervention is based on the principles of self-efficacy, cognitive-behavioral strategies to change attitudes and beliefs about condoms, and behavioral strategies. We hypothesize that the effectiveness of contingency management will be greater when used in combination with cognitive-behavioral treatment strategies. Specifically, we aim to recruit 45 MA users at high risk for HIV/STD, including those engaging in HRSB, and randomize them into one of three conditions in a crossover trial: a)
