A Dog Day Story To get ahold of an unbelievable prize, you're going to need to work some merchandise. Watch as Pooch, the shop owner's youngest dog, discovers a couple of decks of Don't Forget Your Cape in Pep's birthday suit. Can you guess what it is?Uterine estrogen-induced cyclosporin A-sensitive phosphorylation of NF-kappaB p50 in the ovariectomized mouse uterus is mediated by p38 mitogen-activated protein kinase. Uterine estrogen-induced Akt phosphorylation, and c-myc mRNA and protein expression occur in organ-cultured mouse uteri, as well as in intact mice. Because NF-kappaB/p50 is regulated post-translationally through phosphorylation, we herein examined whether the Akt-regulated phosphorylation of NF-kappaB/p50 is required for estrogen-induced gene expression. Uterine organ-cultured mouse uteri were treated for 5 days with 17beta-estradiol (E2), PPT (a partial estrogen agonist), tamoxifen, or ICI 182,780, a pure estrogen receptor antagonist. Western analysis showed that all three ovarian hormones induced a time-dependent phosphorylation of NF-kappaB/p50 in intact uteri. On treatment with E2 (5 micromol/L), the phosphorylated NF-kappaB/p50, the induction of c-myc, and protein expression of zif268 increased at 1 day, and peaked at 3 days. Interestingly, this E2-induced phosphorylation of NF-kappaB/p50 was significantly blocked by cyclosporin A (CyA, 10 micromol/L) concomitant with the inhibition of Akt activation. Inhibition of the p38 mitogen-activated protein kinase (p38MAPK) with the inhibitor SB203580 (5 micromol/L), in combination with E2 stimulation also down-regulated Akt phosphorylation
