The following content will be replaced:. FIXED Silent Hunter 3 v 1.4b. Silent hunter 3 for PC.Sudden respiratory arrest in a 14-year-old boy. Sudden death is not uncommon in children, and more than 50% of cases are asphyxial. The most common cause of asphyxial respiratory arrest in children is respiratory tract infection, whereas a cardiac arrhythmia is the most common cause in adults. The underlying disease associated with cardiac arrhythmias is one of the major predictors of fatality. We report a case of sudden death in a 14-year-old boy. The patient was brought to an emergency department by his father with a complaint of sudden respiratory arrest and convulsions. He was intubated and resuscitated with 3 mg bolus of adrenaline, 20 mEq of potassium chloride, and 1 mg epinephrine. Arterial blood gases showed mixed respiratory and metabolic acidosis with low serum glucose. The patient's heart rate progressively increased to more than 160 beats/min, and he experienced ventricular fibrillation. He was defibrillated twice using 10J of biphasic shocks with 120/60. VF recurred, and he was defibrillated a third time using 20 J of biphasic shocks. The patient was then placed on extracorporeal membrane oxygenation. On postmortem examination, the cause of death was determined to be catecholamine-induced cardiac arrhythmia due to a high vagal tone. Subsequent to the autopsy, the patient's father was found to be a heavy smoker. Our case is unusual in two ways. First, the cause of death was arrhythmia, which is not usually seen in catecholamine-induced cardiac death. Second, the father was a smoker, although he did not have a history of smoking in the patient's family.
