Emmanuel Macron has been in contact with Trump in the past several days to convince him to stay, according to a spokesman for the French president, amid concerns that the U.S. leader could leave the summit, which was set to run through Friday, before the leaders of the 27 member states gathered in Brussels. That's particularly concerning given that Trump caused a diplomatic uproar late last month when he said that "the U.S. will be substantially reducing its payments" to NATO. "We are in regular contact with the U.S. on this topic," the spokesman said. The gathering could also be overshadowed by Trump's administration's efforts to negotiate a significant arms deal with Saudi Arabia. Trump hosted the other heads of state during a photo op Thursday, each pausing to pose for a head-to-head picture with the president. Several leaders, including
