Familial (hereditary) low-penetrance syndromes are recognized as a significant risk factor for developing cancer. We now have sufficient understanding of the key genetic risk factors associated with these syndromes to inform clinical practice. In this review, we discuss current evidence regarding the prevalence of cancer in those with hereditary low-penetrance syndromes. Published data indicate that susceptibility to cancer is present in the majority of individuals with hereditary syndromes, even when cancer is observed late in life. Therefore, management decisions involving the use of therapies such as prophylactic mastectomy, prophylactic oophorectomy, and colorectal cancer screening in these individuals should be guided by the risk stratification and age-appropriate cancer surveillance algorithms that are appropriate for the general population with a given syndrome.Q: retrieve data in ollydbg from a specific address i have an application compiled with ollydbg and i have the file in text and i want to retrieve the code of a specific address. i have tried with the following statements but nothing seems to work, the format is exactly the same of the image bellow: i'm on a 64 bits machine the file is compiled with the following parameters AppName 6d1f23a050
