I. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to laser technology and, more particularly, to a linear beam scanning apparatus for use with a laser scanner. II. Description of the Prior Art It is known in the prior art to provide a laser scanner using a linear beam scanning apparatus. One such apparatus is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,571,712 to Minuti. The Minuti apparatus is used to scan a semiconductor substrate. The apparatus comprises a platform for supporting the substrate, a scanning assembly (scanner) having a rotatable mirror, and a drive assembly which accelerates and decelerates the mirror. The scanning assembly is mechanically coupled to the drive assembly. Such a configuration may be undesirable for scanning a vehicle tire. It is also known in the prior art to provide a laser scanning apparatus having a scanning assembly and a drive assembly wherein the scanning assembly is physically coupled to a support member and one or more actuators are employed to provide a lateral translation between the scanning assembly and the support member. Such an apparatus is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,572,109 to Mueller. The Mueller apparatus uses a general purpose stepper motor to translate a scanning assembly. The movement provided by the stepper motor is step-wise and hence, as the stepper motor turns, the scanning assembly undergoes no continuous linear translation. Further, because the stepper motor is not directly coupled to the scanning assembly, the stepper motor and scanning assembly are susceptible to oscillation and misalignment. Another type of prior art scanning apparatus utilizes a linear drive motor to translate a scanning assembly. In this type of apparatus, the motor is axially coupled to the scanning assembly, and therefore, the motor is incapable of axial displacement. Further, like the stepper motor, if the linear drive motor is driven at a non-zero speed, oscillation and misalignment can result. Accordingly, it
