Woman accused of scaring elderly woman with knife at Walmart Authorities in Texas are trying to find a woman who allegedly took a knife to a shopping center Sunday afternoon, prompting the elderly victim to panic. The call came in around 4 p.m. to the Alamo Walmart in the 4900 block of Highway 75, just east of the intersection of Cavanaugh Road. An elderly woman told police she was in her car at the store when she noticed a woman running toward her, along with another man. The two men began to punch the woman in the face, and the woman pulled a knife and held it to the woman's throat. The man with the knife held the victim in her car until the other suspect ran off with the keys. The woman was able to escape from the car and drive home. The woman has been identified as 24-year-old Cora Ann Sanders. She's charged with aggravated robbery and two counts of felony assault. Short-term effect of fermented soy product on serum total carotenoids and vitamin C in patients with colorectal adenomas. Prevention of colorectal adenomas has been shown in few randomized controlled trials, and there is no clear evidence for specific dietary recommendations to prevent adenomas. Therefore, the objective of this study was to investigate whether a short-term change in the intake of soy products would result in a reduction in serum carotenoids and plasma vitamin C in patients with colorectal adenomas. Thirty-two patients with confirmed adenomas and 32 control subjects were included in this study. Patients with polyps were excluded from the study before undergoing colonoscopy, and all patients received a randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled diet including the following 4 options: isoenergetic control (basal diet), fermented soy product, boiled soy product, and isoflavone supplement. Each diet was consumed for 4 wk. Significant increases in serum total carotenoids (in the fermented soy product group) c6a93da74d
