The garden is located between the St. Bonifatius and St. Petri Lutheran Church. History The original design of the garden was created in the 1830s by the garden artist Georg Christian Friedrich Grabow. In its current form the design was revised in 1858 by the Dresden garden architect Johann Andreas Hofer, and in 1882-84, the work was further developed by the garden architect Michael Kiessling. The garden is maintained today by the Stiftung St. John of Münster. On May 19, 1933, a decree of the Prussian Ministry of the Interior was issued, now also known as the "Bloody Sunday Order". This decree consisted of two parts: one dealing with the confiscation of Jewish property, and the other, which was made public for the first time only in 1988, on the "Regime for the Physical Protection of the Jews in Germany." For all citizens of the Third Reich who had the "Jewish" stamp (stamp 203) on their identity papers, it was a mandatory requirement that they wear the yellow star that became known as the "Jewish badge". For Jews and other "non-Aryans", this meant having to wear the yellow star on their clothing 24 hours a day, which was only made possible by ordering the houses with yellow-star stamps to also be marked with a "G" (Garden) in addition to the 203.
