Afox GeForce G210 Driver

This new, highly optimized driver is the result of 30 weeks of tuning and optimization by the leading software and hardware teams at NVIDIA. It's a proven combination of innovative technologies, technologies that enhance the gaming experience and technologies that deliver maximum performance - to the benefit of gaming enthusiasts around the world. This combination, combined with the newly released GeForce gameready technology enables GeForce gamers to experience high performance, virtual reality and real-time 3D rendering, and prepare for the future.

The original developer responsible for the primary development of the GeForce game-ready technology, Rob

Huerta, also introduces today, his new project: Game

Ready Drivers. His effort will also be based on the open source, NVIDIA GPU program and will continue to evolve the game-ready technology for GeForce users. We welcome the effort of Rob and his team to improve the user experience for GeForce users and will be engaged in a dialogue to help his team evolve this effort. It is our goal to continue supporting the Game Ready project and its users. So now that this card has been available for over 3 years - it's about time that we have drivers available. Has the OpenCL API changed? Can we make the card work under XP? It is DirectX 10 compliant. So why do we have to wait for many years for a driver? And why can't it be beta drivers? Let's just say I'm tired of waiting and so are others. Why can't we have a beta driver release? If I cannot buy the card - I'm still going to buy one and play with it. So why do we have to wait for so ## long? Something just seems wrong with this picture. But hey - if there's more demand for the card than there are current drivers, then I guess we're ok. 5ec8ef588b
