HD Online Player (discovery Channel Universe Videos In)

In the upcoming years, the landscape of OTT universe is going to get much more crowded with the new players are getting ready to roll out their own streaming services. Disney already announced that it is pulling all of its exclusive titles from Netflix in an effort to create its own direct-to-consumer streaming service called Disney+. The service will be available in 2019 with a rumored cost of $10 per month. In addition to its whopping $ 13 billion original content budget, Disney also owns an astounding library of classics to pull from thanks to its successful history, from Star Wars to High School Musical. Comcast is planning to launch an ad-supported streaming service in 2020 that will be free to its existing TV subscribers and around $12 per month for the new subscribers. The company will tap its TV subscriber base and try to scale with digital advertising to become a direct competitor to ad-free streaming service providers. Apple is also releasing its own streaming service, reportedly in April 2019 which will include original exclusives and content from third-party companies like HBO and STARZ. Apple has an estimated $ 1 billion original content budget; the streaming service will be free for iOS users and will be available in 100 countries upon its release. Tricia Tan, Associate Professor of Physics, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology The dream to build a city and then watch people living in that city has always been close to me. We have realized our dream in more ways than just the building of a city. We want people to interact and socialize with each other and also have fun. In that respect, we do have a sense of fun in our game: being the architect and the mayor. I tried to keep the game related to science. This is because for people, especially the younger generation, science can be fun and interesting. If you think of our universe as the 'real world', we can build a city on it. With the help of children, we make the 'universe' come alive. Through the game, we encourage our players to question and explore how the world works and the world is. Then we try to provide the answers to their questions. Discovery Guys is a channel that showcases interesting links, news and footage from around the web.
