Has a nice link. http://tinyurl.com/MyGordianOfferPage  Welcome to the Crack Thread - the source for all of your fix-it needs. First of all, I thank you for reading my thread (even if you didn't click on the link at the end). But even if you didnt click on the link at the end, this is a clear indication that you found my thread interesting enough to care enough to read it. Because I've been quite busy making some other threads and other cracks, and it's only when I get a new reader that I pay attention. I am looking forward to seeing more of your threads.  There are two sides to this little game. One side is the "cracker", the other side is the victim. The person on the victim side is usually much more sensitive, and as such is going to take more to break into, and even then the cracker's going to have a very difficult time. It should be noted that a cracker is usually not out to cause harm to anyone, but is rather looking for security vulnerabilities in software as possible, and more often than not using them for malicious purposes. For the purpose of this thread, I will refer to a person who wants to break into software, and use it in harmful, if not illegal, ways.  Now, if you happen to be the victim of a cracker, who is the actual person who is looking to break into your PC, they could be motivated to look for just about anything, and you can guess that they will be at least a little bit more malicious than your average software cracker. Also, a victim could be a person who gets hacked, and now has their precious data stolen. This is especially the case in the mobile software industry. If you get hacked or have your data stolen, you could be left without a car, or a job. Or they could just as easily be one of your coworkers who found out the address for your house and wants to rob your parents for all your secret money.
