President-elect Donald Trump says he's "very surprised" that the New Hampshire primary is going to be a three-person race -- he's leading at the moment in the Granite State. The Republican presidential candidate told CNN's Wolf Blitzer on "The Situation Room" Monday that he "is not really sure" why this is happening. "If I were leading, I would say, 'Well, I think we should have a rematch,'" he said. "You're going to have somebody who has been very successful in the business world, somebody who's very successful in the military and somebody who's been the head of the Housing and Urban Development. I think we should have a rematch." Trump also said that if it's not a three-way race in New Hampshire, he's "almost positive" he'll be leading. "I'm leading a lot, so, but we'll see what happens," he said. "It's actually possible I could be leading a three-person race. It's possible."
