Finally, as expected, it's in the user interface department where Lightroom 5 has been most improved. In the New Experience tab, some new features that you may find attractive are:

- The ability to do basically everything with a single box (an option that's likely to please anyone who used the Editorial module as a layout tool).
- The equivalent of the image browser functionality of Lightroom 4.3, but with the addition of actual "folders" that you can create.
- A much more refined finder and rating system. The upper-right "favorites" function has been replaced by a "smart grouping" button. If you can't do exactly what you want, you can at least get an intelligent result.

- The ability to really customize your lists (as in, use Lightbox-style on/off switches instead of hard-coded 19 options as in Lightroom 4.3).
- The ability to "free-form" tag an image. If you leave out the word, "You", then Lightroom will infer what you meant.
- The ability to "master" images as in Lightroom 4.3.
