As I've worked more with the iPad Pro, I find myself really enjoying the experience. I think it just takes time for things to really come together and to take shape. I'm still working on it. I find the extra space on the screen to be a huge advantage and it will always be used. With the iPad Pro I now have a scenario where I'm now more inclined to work in the field than at home. Of course, it will never replace my desktop but I think the iPad Pro is a good complement to my desktop workflow. Also, now that I have a good knowledge of all the tools, I can pretty much work anywhere with the iPad with the exception of the development tools. I find that I work faster and the quality of the work is better. This is good especially for projects that are outside of my home studio. All and all a good update. I'm sure it will smooth out over time. But so far, so good. I was an early adopter of the iPad, back when it was first introduced. I could see the potential in the promise of mobility. In the four years since I bought my first iPad I have become a pretty avid apple user. I like the Apple products in general. That is not to say others in the market or even competitors products are bad. I just happen to really, really LOVE Apple products. I really do. However, my iPad use is limited right now. I love the idea of running into a new application and then suddenly not remember why I didn't plug it in. I have Photoshop Elements and Photoshop for a long time, and in the past few years it has become a bit of a chore to deal with all the extra features, such as filters. The interface for PSHE is a lot more streamlined and cleaner than in PS, so it might just be a matter of getting used to it.
