It's a sad day for those folks who put their work on the internet, it's a sad day when protesters destroy the works of those who dream big, it's a sad day when someone can destroy talents as an intent, and it's all a sad day.

For instance, Adobe's app is not intuitive when you're a beginner-level user. You can do some things, but you cannot do everything you're used to. You cannot create vector graphics, editing curves, and resizing images is limited and not the best. Adobe encourages site owners to internally build custom pages on their own websites. In CS6 and earlier, you could choose from a handful of stock templates and customize them with your own CSS and images. CS6 opens the door on Flash templates and allowed you to make them work inside Photoshop. Now, you create your own, using Adobe's supplied code which is really fairly limited. You can't, for instance, edit the fonts that are used or the look of the menu bar, but you can insert them into your page and make the layout your own. It's not a custom page in the browser sense. Also, when you choose one of the suggestions, you're given a choice to create a web template (which are Flash-based) or a Photoshop template. The latter is about what you'd normally expect, while the former is actually a PDF with some JavaScript attached to it.

Both of these are normally very pricey. Fortunately, it seems that better technology is often well received, and SSD and RAM prices long-term should continue to drop. Of course, these things come down to the economy and technology in general. If SSD prices rise by a large amount, then that is a sign that the prices of the SB-700 will also rise by a similar amount. If this happens, it could be the end of the SB-700 for low-cost reasons. Select the layer you want to apply your blending options and effects to.
