The EU's strategy document, the Cancer Plan, was published in 2012 with a focus on new knowledge, including recommendations for better ways of delivering cancer treatments. We aimed to determine whether the recommendations translate into practice in the field of cancer care delivery across Europe. A nine-member selection panel was constituted, comprising five nominated cancer care providers from seven European countries and four representatives from the expert panel for the Cancer Plan. A questionnaire was developed to capture documentation of specific cancer care delivery activities in 6 areas of care delivery: population screening, diagnosis, treatment, supportive care, palliative care, and health service delivery. Documentation of activities was carried out through four key informant interviews with senior physicians and one through a discussion group. Data were then entered into a Microsoft Excel database, and responses compared using descriptive statistics. The survey identified a range of active delivery of the recommendations of the Cancer Plan. However, activities across countries demonstrated wide variation in intensity, quality and application of the Cancer Plan's recommendations. Recommendations relating to palliative care have the greatest and most varied application. There is a need to better understand the factors underlying this variation and the way that it affects the delivery of cancer care in the European Union. This would help ensure that resources are appropriately allocated to highquality cancer care delivery across Europe. FILED 04aeff104c
