- The American Studies Association launched a lawsuit against the Trump administration for appointing a right-wing ideologue to lead the National Endowment for the Humanities.
- On Wednesday, the day we publish this, the Big Ten Conference will unanimously vote on whether to expand from 12 schools to 14, and in the process commit to $250 million in athletic facilities over the next two decades. Such a move would elevate athletic dominance over academic performance and have implications for federal funding and possible government interference.
- In a Huffington Post article published on Wednesday, Brooke Helman sets out her views on how the media are looking for scandal and they won't be satisfied until they find one, even if it's years after the fact. This echoes numerous polls that show a majority of people believe there is a "witch hunt" against Trump by the media. It also seems to imply that Trump is abusing the powers of his office for reasons other than the usual suspects.
- In a St. Louis Post-Dispatch article published yesterday, Jefferson City Information Commissioner Bob Raynes outlined how the Trump administration has proposed increasing penalties for speeding motorists. This is a great idea, and probably eliminates at least one "must not violate" traffic rule. However, it only affects vehicles with a speed of at least 55 miles per hour.

According to the FBI, speeding is a leading cause of police-related deaths. And this hardly solves the problem.

- If you're a regular reader of this blog, then you should already know about the Ringer's Supreme Court podcast with Jay Caspian Kang and Bilal Qabdali. If you're not listening yet, go do it today.
- Sportsdata.com has announced its new slogan and tagline: "Always the First." This slogan and tagline are sure to cause many to look at the site with distrust, but as they say, "all that glitters is not gold." And this new slogan and tagline is more like a metaphor for many sites that have risen from the ashes.
- In a New York Times piece about the relationship between Dick and Betsy DeVos, a source notes that the DeVos family was able to break with the 04aeff104c
