Constitutive activation of the endothelial growth factor receptor 1 (VEGFR1/VEGFR2) results in a number of pathological conditions, including cancer, whereas inhibition of VEGFR1/VEGFR2 signaling is widely believed to be a prerequisite for antiangiogenic drug development. Here, we describe a robust method to screen for molecules that inhibit VEGFR1/VEGFR2 by trapping the receptor-ligand complex in lipid nanodiscs, thus preventing VEGFR1/VEGFR2 from activating downstream signaling. To investigate the inhibitory mechanisms of the docked nanodiscs, we performed a phosphokinase assay with a fluorescent ligand. Upon platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF) binding to the VEGFR1/VEGFR2, the P3(Y)YMPMEEV sequence of the ligand is phosphorylated by the VEGFR tyrosine kinase domain, and the phosphorylated peptide reacts with a fluorescent antibody. The VEGFR1/VEGFR2 nanodiscs successfully trapped the ligand to
