Share this article on LinkedIn Email Alain Prost was crowned the season's best Formula 1 driver in the 1991 season-opening Japanese Grand Prix. The legendary Frenchman has dominated the bookmakers' odds to be crowned as the title's best driver of the year - but he lost out by more than six lengths to Colin Chapman's McLaren protege Ayrton Senna. While Prost may well have missed out on the Drivers' Championship to McLaren rival Nigel Mansell, he was crowned the champion by some distance as the Toro Rosso driver won seven races that year. What made Prost's feat all the more remarkable was that he only had one dominant season, while his nearest rival Mansell had two excellent years. The 23-year-old Belgian had only one win - at the French Grand Prix - when he finally took the drivers' title in the 1997 season, missing out by less than half a point. Mansell's two titles in 1989 and 1990 were a reflection of Senna's poor reliability record throughout his career, while Prost not only came second in points to Senna, but he also missed the Japanese Grand Prix. First place on the podium was claimed by Gerhard Berger, in his maiden season with Ferrari. The German, who retired at the end of the 1991 season to pursue a successful team management career, beat the increasingly influential Prost as well as the cream of the crop of drivers in F1 that year. The likes of Williams driver Nigel Mansell and McLaren team-mate Riccardo Patrese finished second and third and F1 greats, Nelson Piquet and Alain de Cadenet, came in fourth and fifth. The home of the Japanese Grand Prix had a magical feel that year, and the new and exciting Suzuka circuit finished off a thrilling season that featured much of the best F1 of the modern era. In a three-way title battle, Niki Lauda - at one stage having appeared to be on the way to becoming the best driver in history - snatched second place from Prost by only two points after he beat the Ferrari star for the title by virtue of a superior points finish. Senna - a resurgent point scorer in the final race in Adelaide - finished second in the championship as he lost out by a point to the Austrian. The 1975 world
