One of the most common things I see with those who use software like Photoshop is that their images are often too 'flat'. There are two main reasons why most of your images will look like they were shot on a flat surface. The first reason is that you're shooting in RAW format. Every new image you make is going to come from a RAW image. If you are using Photoshop, you can use the image sharpening tools to make this even better. The second reason that can cause your images to look flat is that your subjects aren't quite in focus or you have just finished doing some very basic edits on the image before posting. e3d0a04c9c
