processing via flow-invasive amperometry. Flow-invasive amperometry (FIA) is a technique to measure cell-surface-bound reaction products and/or signaling molecules in living cells. This method involves the replacement of the reaction mix in the standard electrochemical cell by a flow stream of cells, via a high-performance interface, that consists of living cells and a reaction that involves the exchange of a product for the cell that is a necessary component of the electrochemical reaction.
This gives the cell its electrochemical properties. One advantage of FIA is that the transfer of the reaction product from the cell to the electrode surface takes place outside of the cells, reducing the
