Mitt Romney probably wasn't much of a thinker during the 2012 presidential election, but he sure is now, thinking about the elections to come. Today, he told Tea Party supporters, who celebrated their first full year of existence, and many others, why they shouldn't think of them as a wing of the Republican Party. "You folks, I'm a liberal. I'm a moderate, but I'm a conservative, and I love this country and I want to see it be more like it is than like it used to be," he said during a question-and-answer session. "And because I'm a conservative, I want people to have a ladder for them to climb. I want people to be able to reach the top, but that doesn't mean we want to take away their ladder. We want to put the ladder back up there." Wow. This is going to be fun to watch as Democrats try to spin Romney's statement into a positive. Here's the most salient part of what he said: "It's a great country, but it is in trouble when the people that have been in charge of it for eight years are sort of a mafia family and they are running it into the ditch," Romney said. See what he did there? He's telling his party to get rid of a bully boss, and now his opponent is trying to defend him against this charge. It's a deft move by Obama, and one that will likely leave the GOP's moderate wing unsettled. The rest of Romney's comments were really quite good. He said in other words what most Republicans think about Democrats. "I think people realize, they don't like the direction the country's going in. They don't believe it's the right direction. I'm not sure they know what to do, and they hear us [Democrats] talk about things and we'll have a record to run on," he said. "There's a better way for people to do things and a lot of people are ready for a change." Get the Monitor Stories you care about delivered to your inbox.
